Focus on...extra funding through Pupil Premium

Good news for North East schools as yesterday's announcement of the Government plans to increase the Pupil Premium and extend the eligibility criteria will bring £31m in extra funding according to reports in the local press.

From next year the Pupil Premium will increase by £112 to £600 per pupil and more children will qualify for the Premium as the Government has extended its reach to cover any child that has been registered for Free School Meals (FSM) in the past six years. The Journal estimates this will mean nearly 80,000 children in the North East will benefit from the expansion.

The move comes after many Head Teachers and education commentators have highlighted the limitations of the current eligibility criteria in reaching all disadvantaged children and young people. Children who have been eligible for Free School Meals at any point in their school career have been found to have consistently lower educational attainment than those who have never been eligible and in the North East just 31% of pupils eligible for Free School Meals leave school with five good GCSEs including English and Maths.

Announcing the changes, Children's Minister Sarah Teather said "For too long social background has been a deciding factor in a child's achievement and future prospects. In a fair society, it's the Government's responsibility to close the gulf in achievement, where the poorest children are less likely to leave school with five good GCSEs than their less deprived classmates."

Head Teachers and local politicians have widely welcomed the increase in funding and change to the criteria however some have raised concerns about where the 'new' money was coming from and whether it would only offset cuts in other services or budgets.

Pat Glass, Labour MP for North West Durham and member of the Education Select Committee, said: "I am, of course, delighted at any additional funding targeted at disadvantaged pupils, but this increase in funding is coming to schools at the same time as Local Authority funding is being slashed, schools are losing their additional education support allowances and they are having to pay for specialist support services that they previously received free. I am, therefore, not convinced that this is new money and not just more recycling of existing funds.”

Coverage also includes discussions with School leaders as to how they use the Pupil Premium in their schools . Callum Kidd, Head Teacher of Carr Hill Primary School in Gateshead, where 62% of children are eligible for free school meals, said: “It is up to the schools on how the money is spent, but there are guidelines. We look at all of our children and their attainment and those pupils who are considered to be ‘slow movers’ in terms of their progress are put into key groups to get additional support from teachers and teaching assistants. I used this year’s Pupil Premium allocation to recruit more teaching assistants who give one-to-one tuition to targeted pupils.”

At this year’s SCHOOLS NorthEast Summit, Prof Rob Coe of Durham University presented a guide to the most impactful way for schools to allocate the Pupil Premium based on the Sutton Trust’s toolkit which can be accessed here

In related news, Alan Milburn, ex MP for Darlington and the Government’s Social Mobility Tsar, today delivered a major speech on child poverty suggesting that progress has started to decline and that the Government’s child poverty target would “simply be missed”. He called on the Government to focus efforts on early years support and childcare stating that the countries that have made the biggest improvements in both reducing poverty and increasing social mobility invest heavily in these areas.

Head Teacher positions ‘hard to fill’

The target culture, rising workloads and cuts in pay are putting teachers off from stepping up to the role of Headship, according to new research commissioned by the NAHT. More than a third of primary schools and almost a fifth of secondary schools were found to struggle when advertising the position last year. Roman Catholic schools face the most acute shortages because of their recruitment criteria.

New standard to recognise 'Master Teachers'

A new 'Master Teacher Standard' to recognise outstanding teachers should be introduced, according to an independent review commissioned by the Government. The award would be given to those who have a "deep understanding of their subject specialisms, going beyond the programmes they teach". Teachers would also have to have gained the respect of both parents and pupils and be highly regarded by colleagues to become known as "master teachers".

Two-thirds of children fail phonetics reading test

The pilot scheme of a new primary school reading check indicated two thirds of pupils are likely to fail the test when it is introduced next year. Figures released from the pilot show that just 32 per cent of six-year-olds reached the expected level set by about teachers. Schools minister Nick Gibb coined the test "appropriately challenging" and stated, "we need to face up to the uncomfortable truth that, despite the hard work of teachers, not enough of our children are able to read to a high enough standard. We must adjust our sights if we are to tackle the country's reading problem."

Head to Head

This week we spoke to Steve Burrows from Ormesby School in Middlesbrough.

This week was...the first real taste of winter for us with ice and gale force winds. We secured our supply of salt and grit for the season but have no solution for wind in school!

The two best things that happened at school last week were... 1) I was asked to judge the inter class Christmas tree competition at Priory Woods Special School and thoroughly enjoyed the experience. I have delegated the job of Santa! 2) A sticky toffee pudding made by year 11 hospitality and catering pupils. I did not delegate the tasting.

The biggest disappointment at school last week was... I don't have one. I just don't do disappointed.

The funniest thing that happened at school last week was... I was asked to the OAP Christmas Dinner by a pupil.

One thing that would have made my job easier last week was... If everyone I had meetings with had been on time, however I must admit to being late to one myself!

Top of my to-do list for this week is...RAISEonline analysis/action planning and the working party document "Financial Education and the Curriculum"

My hero of last week was... A pupil who stopped a fight over a book!

My villain of last week was... our ICT managed service provider.

Question from last week's Head Teacher: How many students have you permanently excluded in the last two years, did you have to...? Four, and yes.

My question for next week's head Teacher is.... What are you planning to do with your ROL?

Star pupil...running Santa's

Nearly 500 young people took part in a festive fun run fundraiser at Durham Johnston School. The students and school staff dressed in Santa costumes as part of the Santa Run raising money for St Cuthbert's Hospice.

Could try harder... cheating exam boards

This week's news was flooded by stories of cheating exam boards and the underhand tactics used to increase market share. The reports have prompted the Government to launch an investigation, with reforms to the system likely to follow.
